Overview

Imagine being surrounded by staggering high mountains and a desert-like landscape with little or no vegetation. This is what Mustang region is like. The trek to Muktinath is a very popular one with both the local and foreign tourists, which encompasses exciting Thakali villages, apple orchards, rhododendron forests and the world's deepest gorge, Kali Gandaki. You get to see some striking views of the incredible snow capped mountain peaks, unique temples and monasteries along the windy valleys.

The trek to Muktinath begins from Pokhara following the world's deepest gorge on the way up and takes you to a barren land without trees. The trek goes up and down a rocky trail and passes through terraced rice fields and villages. The region is home to Gurung and Thakali people. Passing all the Thakali villages makes you realize Nepal's spectacular diversity at its finest. The final destination of this trek, Muktinath is a holy temple for both Hindus and Buddhists. Many devotees from around the world come to Muktinath to offer their prayers and wash their sins in the 108 taps decorated in the Muktinath temple.

The Mustang region is famous for apple production. One of the villages named Marpha also has its own brandies and rum made out of apple and apricot cultivated in the village itself. You can also find black stones known as shaligrams in the Kali Gandaki river. After your trek is finished, you can relax your sore muscles at the natural hot water springs at Tatopani.
